I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Leeds LP ("Leeds"), through its undersigned counsel, submits this Memorandum of Points and Authorities in response to the United States' Motion to Dismiss Claim One of the First Amended Complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

The Government's erroneous tax lien on Leeds' property is a means of exercising its power of distraint on that property, and is the first step taken toward ultimately satisfying the tax assessment for which the lien was issued. Therefore, the Court has subject-matter jurisdiction of this matter under 26 U.S.C. § 7426(a)(1) because the definition of "levy", as defined in the Internal Revenue Code, is satisfied. As the analysis to follow demonstrates, the question is not whether a "lien" is a "levy" as a semantic inquiry. Rather, a proper analysis of the Code under the circumstances here leads to the conclusion that Leeds has sufficiently alleged a claim against the Government to withstand this Motion.

II. FACTS ALLEGED IN THE COMPLAINT

In reviewing this Motion to Dismiss, the Court must accept as true all material factual allegations alleged in the Complaint. Wah Chang v. Duke Energy Trading & Mktg., LLC, 507 F.3d 1222, 1224, n.1 (9th Cir.2007) (citing cases). The Amended Complaint makes the following allegations, which must be accepted as true:

First, Leeds is a California limited partnership which was properly formed on June 23, 1995 and has continuously operated as a valid partnership separate and distinct from its partners. See Amended Complaint ¶¶ 5 & 8. Second, that the alleged deficient taxpayers, the Ballantynes, are not partners in Leeds, that Leeds owns the property on which the IRS imposed the illegal lien, and the Ballantynes have absolutely no ownership interest in the levied upon property. Id. at ¶¶ 9-10. Third, "on or about July 17, 2006, the Defendants illegally and arbitrarily issued and recorded a lien against Plaintiff's property interest located at 3207 McCall Street, San Diego, California, 92106 for income tax liability of the Ballantynes for the calendar years 1985, 1986, 1990 and 1997 in the amount of $5,212,494.62." Id. at ¶ 11. Fourth, that defendant's contention that Leeds "is the nominee/alter ego of Susanne Ballantyne" is erroneous. Id. at ¶ 12.

Next, on March 21, 2007, Leeds filed an administrative request for return of the property with the District Director. Id. at ¶ 13. The Amended Complaint further alleges that the District Director "refused to act on Plaintiff's administrative request" and has not returned the property to Leeds LP." Id. at ¶ 14. Finally, the Amended Complaint alleges that Defendants failed "to grant Plaintiff a hearing" and that its "failure to consider the administrative request is an abuse of discretion." Id. at ¶ 16.

The Government's Motion implies that Leeds' administrative request was formally "denied without a hearing." Motion at 2. This is not alleged in the Amended Complaint, and as of February 28, 2008, the date the Amended Complaint was filed, the Government had simply taken no action on Leeds LP's request. Any attempt by the Government to rewrite the Amended Complaint and suggest that a formal denial has been issued must be rejected. To the extent that such denial actually occurred, it did not occur until March 17, 2008, which is after the Amended Complaint was filed. See Attachment A. In addition, the denial appears to suggest that Leeds' March 21, 2007 request is an inadequate request because "the IRS has not seized/secured any property." Id.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

Although the Government primarily rests its argument on sovereign immunity, it cannot dispute that it has waived immunity under Section 26 U.S.C. § 7426(g); see also Library of Congress v. Shaw, 478 U.S. 310, 319 & n.4 (1986). The substance of the Government's position is that because waivers of sovereign immunity are supposed to be strictly construed, the statute must be read to favor the Government's interpretation. Simply because waivers of sovereign immunity are strictly construed, however, it does not follow that the plain language of a statute can be ignored. Strict construction does not mean that the Government's reading of statute must be accepted, merely because it says so.

As this Court has recognized: "[T]he Government 'cannot carry the day by invoking general maxims of judicial policy.'" Blair v. IRS, 304 F.3d 861, 868 (9th Cir. 2002) (quoting In re Town & Country Home Nursing Servs., Inc., 963 F.2d 1146, 1152 (9th Cir. 1991). Proper statutory construction requires more. While waivers of sovereign immunity are strictly construed, "it is also 'well established that when the federal government waives its immunity, the scope of the waiver is construed to achieve its remedial purpose.'" Blair, 304 F.3d at 867-68 (9th Cir. 2002) (quoting In re Town & Country, 963 F.2d at 1151 (9th Cir. 1991). In fact, in quoting Justice Cardozo, the Supreme Court has stated: "'The exemption of the sovereign from suit involves hardship enough where consent has been withheld. We are not to add to its rigor by refinement of construction where consent has been announced.'" United States v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 338 U.S. 366, 383 (1949) (quoting Anderson v. Hayes Constr. Co., 243 N.Y. 140, 147, 153 N.E. 28, 29-30 (1926) (Cardozo, J.). In addition, to the extent there is any ambiguity that a lien can be a levy under the Code, see infra, the principle of sovereign immunity does not require courts to resolve all doubtful questions concerning the scope of a particular statute in the government's favor when the literal requirements of the statute are otherwise met. See, e.g., Hill v. United States, 571 F.2d 1098, 1102 (9th Cir.1978) (rejecting sovereign immunity argument and applying a statute that was silent on the issue of retroactive effect).

Finally, the context of this case matters. The Ninth Circuit in Flores v. United States, 551 F.2d 1169 (9th Cir. 1977) stated:

> Care must be taken to recognize that the statutory scheme which governs tax litigation between individuals and the United States Government is not monolithic; particular sections of the Internal Revenue Code, as they apply to persons who are differently situated, serve different purposes, were drafted with different intents, and therefore require individualized construction. [. . .]
> [Section 7426] was enacted specifically because under then-current law, the United States could not be sued by third persons where its collection activities interfered with their property rights. The fact that it contains one > of the few exceptions to the anti-injunction act, 26 U.S.C. s 7421, shows that it was meant to have teeth and that litigants within its terms were regarded as significantly different from others with tax-related claims against the Government.

Flores v. United States, 551 F.2d 1169, 1173-74 (9th Cir. 1977) (emphasis added). With these principles in mind, the position being advanced by the Government does not warrant a dismissal of the wrongful levy claim.

IV. DISCUSSION

The primary argument advanced by the Government is that a "lien" can never be a "levy" as that term is understood under Code and, on that basis, Claim 1 should be dismissed. See Motion at 2 ("The First Amended Complaint errs in conflating a lien and a levy."). That argument is incorrect for several reasons. First, the term "levy" under the Code is broadly defined and encompasses a lien on real property. Second, the Government's authority only superficially supports its position. Last, if this Court dismisses Leeds' claim, it will be left without any meaningful remedy. The Government's Motion should be denied.

A. The Term "Levy" as Defined in the Code.

The Internal Revenue Code broadly defines the term "levy": "The term 'levy' includes the power of distraint and seizure by any means." 26 U.S.C. § 7701(a)(21) (emphasis added); see also 26 U.S.C. § 6331(b) & Miller v. United States, 921 F. Supp. 494, 497 (N.D. Ohio 1996). By its own terms, a levy does not necessarily require any actual "distraint" or "seizure", but merely "includes" such powers. As the court stated in Miller: "'Levy,' therefore, is not simply a synonym for 'seizure' and nothing more. Rather, the term 'levy' in the Code denotes everything else that it otherwise denotes in American law." Id.

Generally speaking, the term levy "is an ambiguous word, with its meaning dependent on the context in which it is used." Hill v. Whitlock Oil Servs., Inc., 450 F.2d 170, 174 (10th Cir. 1971); cf. Flores, 551 F.2d at 1173-74 (9th Cir. 1977) ("particular sections of the Internal Revenue Code, as they apply to persons who are differently situated, serve different purposes, were drafted with different intents, and therefore require individualized construction."). In addition, a levy may also "'refer to all the steps, collectively, by which public revenue is raised.'" Miller at 497 (emphasis added) (quoting In re Zoller's Estate, 171 A.2d 375, 379 (Del. 1961)). In fact, a leading federal tax treatise notes that a "levy is ordinarily used to describe the process of reaching amounts owing to the taxpayer by third persons (e.g., bank deposits)." 4 Boris Bitkker & Lawrence Lokken, Federal Taxation of Income, Estates, & Gifts (2d ed. 1992), ¶ 111.6.5 at 111-12 (emphasis added); see also Miller at 497 (quoting the same).

The Ninth Circuit adopted similar reasoning in explaining the purpose behind Section 7426, which is at issue in this case. Flores at 1174 (noting Section 7426 "was enacted specifically because under then-current law, the United States could not be sued by third persons where its collection activities interfered with their property rights.") (emphasis added). Further, the IRS need not issue a formal notice stating the word "levy" in order for a levy to have occurred under the Code. See, e.g., Interfirst Bank Dallas, N.A. v. United States, 769 F.2d 299, 305 n. 9 (5th Cir. 1985) ("We do not believe that any documentary requirement must be met before a 'levy' can occur within the meaning of § 7426.");[1] see also United Pac. Ins. Co. v. United States, 320 F. Supp. 450, 451 (D. Or. 1970) (holding that notice of lien is equivalent to notice of levy). In sum: "Under the Internal Revenue Code [ ] 'levy' means not only 'seizure', as the Government contends, but also the entire process of collecting a taxpayer's debt." Miller at 497 (emphasis added). When the Government placed the lien on Leeds' real property it took the first step in the process of reaching the amount allegedly owed by the Ballantynes. Thus, it is a "levy" under the Code.

Here, the IRS's lien falls squarely under the definition of "levy" as the term is understood under the Code. First, filing a lien on real property the first step is the process of satisfying a tax assessment out of the proceeds of a sale of that property. The lien here was intended to secure the Government's legal "hold" on the property in question so as to be in a position to collect the tax allegedly owed by the Ballantynes when and if the property is later sold. See Exhibit A to Amended Complaint. Second, the fact that no formal notice using the word "levy" was issued does not compel a result in favor of the Government. See, e.g., Interfirst Bank at 305 n. 9; United Pacific at 451. Moreover, as explained above, the definition of "levy" under the Code is very broad and merely "includes" the power of "distraint and seizure by any means." Here, the "any means" referred to is an erroneous lien placed on Leeds real property.

[1] The issue before the court in Interfirst Bank was whether a "voluntary" payment to the IRS constituted a "levy" for purposes of Section 7426. 769 F.2d at 306 ("where taxpayer voluntarily surrendered its property to the IRS, this section does not waive the government's immunity").

Even if the term "levy" is read less broadly than set out above, this particular lien on real property at issue in this case fits within the definition of "levy" under the Code. By placing a lien on Leeds' property, in an effort to satisfy the tax liability of a third party, the Government has distrained Leeds LP's property. The term "distrain" is commonly defined as "to force or compel to satisfy an obligation by means of distress." Webster's Ninth Collegiate Dictionary (1993) (emphasis added). As plead in the Amended Complaint, the IRS placed an erroneous lien on Leeds' property in an attempt to satisfy the tax liability (i.e., obligation) of a third party—the Ballantynes—under the mistaken belief that Leeds is the nominee/alter ego of Susan C. Ballantyne. See Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 10-12. Given that the lien is now in place, it is axiomatic that Leeds cannot alienate or sell the property without either paying off the entire lien or convincing a third party to pay off the amount of the lien. Thus, the property is distressed based on an erroneous obligation in the amount of over $5 million. Accordingly, when the Government put its lien on Leeds' real property it used a "means" of "distraint" and its action fall within the definition of "levy" under the Code.

The fact that the Government has not physically "seized" the property does not support the United State's position. Section 6631(b) of the Code, which is titled "Levy and distraint" demonstrates that an actual "seizure" need not occur. It states: "In any case in which the Secretary may levy upon property or rights to property, he may seize and sell such property or rights to property (whether real or personal, tangible or intangible)." (emphasis added). Thus, if a "seizure" needs to occur for an actual "levy" to occur, the language contained in Section 6631(b) would not state that the "Secretary … may seize"; but rather would require that an actual seizure occur. Because this language in not so-written, the equation of actual "seizure" with the term "levy" is not tenable under the Code. Section 6631 is part of a larger subchapter of the Code entitled "Subchapter D—Seizure of Property For Collection of Taxes". (emphasis added). Thus, it deals with entire process in which taxes are collected vis-à-vis the "levy" power and broadly defines that term. See 26 U.S.C. 6631(b). The lien at issue here is merely the first step in that process.

Finally, Section 7426(a)(1) states that jurisdiction is proper when "a levy has been made on property or property has been sold pursuant to a levy[.]" (emphasis added). In the case of real property there are two facets to pursuing a security interest to enforce that interest: the distraint on the property, in the case the lien, and the actual surrender and eventual forced sale of the property. See generally 26 U.S.C. §§ 6332 (surrender) & 6335 (sale). Under Section 7426(a)(1) only one of these facets needs to be satisfied for jurisdiction to be proper. The erroneous lien on the real property in question satisfies the statute and jurisdiction is proper.

B. The Government's Cited Authority Does Not Compel Dismissal.

The Government's reliance on United States v. Williams, 514 U.S. 527 (1995) and EC Term of Years v. United States, 127 S. Ct. 1763 (2007) is misplaced because neither of those cases dealt with the situation present here: Whether a wrongful levy claim can brought when the Government erroneously places a lien on a third-party's real property, which distrains the property. Indeed, when viewed through the properly calibrated lens, both cases actually support Leeds LP's position.

The issue before the Court in Williams was whether an individual "who paid a tax under protest to remove a lien on her property has standing to bring a refund under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1), even though the tax she paid was assessed against a third party." Id. at 527. The issues presented in the instant case were simply not before the Court. Similarly, the Court in EC Term of Years addressed the question of "whether the trust may still challenge the levy through an action for tax refund under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1)", even though it missed Section 7426's nine-month limitations period. Id. at 1775.[2]

C. Absent a Wrongful Levy Action, Leeds Would Be Left Without a Meaningful Remedy.

In reality, the Court's decision in Williams actually supports Leeds' position. Throughout the Court's opinion, it continuously stressed that the Respondent "had no realistic alternative to payment of the tax she did not owe, and we do not believe Congress intended to leave parties without a remedy." 514 U.S. at 529; see also id. at 537 ("Though the Government points to three other remedies, none were realistically open to Williams. Nor would any of the vaunted remedies be available to others in her situation."); see also City of Richmond, Ky., v. United States, 348 F. Supp.2d 807, 812 (E.D. Ky. 2004) (explaining underlying rationale in Williams). It was within this context that the Court stated: "If the Government has not levied on property-as it has not levied on Williams' home—the owner cannot challenge such a levy under 26 U.S.C. § 7426." From this statement, the Government argues that a "lien" can never constituted a "levy" under the Code. Such an argument is unpersuasive.

The Supreme Court did not state, as the Government suggests, that a formal notice of lien could never rise to the level of a "levy" as that term is defined under the Code. That issue

[2] The Government's reliance on United States v. Barbier, 896 F.2d 377 (9th Cir. 1990) is similarly misplaced because the issue before that court was "a determination of the extent to which the government is the holder of a secured claim" and whether the Government was entitled to period payments through the Bankruptcy Court. Id. at 379. The context of the Barbier case is wholly different than the one at issue here.

was not before the Court. In fact, as demonstrated above, the Code broadly defines the term "levy" and the Government's overly technical reading of the term cannot be supported. Second, like the Respondent in Williams, if Leeds is not allowed to pursue this wrongful levy and contest the Government's lien, it will be left without a remedy. For example, if Leeds were to attempt to sell the property at issue, the property would be subject to a lien with priority and the lien would cause the proceeds to be paid in the first interest to the IRS. See 26 U.S.C. 6323(a), (b)(4) & (e). Obviously, the only way to satisfy the lien would either be for Leeds or the eventual purchaser to pay the Government the amount of the lien. At that point in time, under the Government's reading of the law, neither Leeds nor the purchaser would have any remedy against the IRS with respect to the lien amount because no formal notice of levy was issued. Despite the fact that "notice of levy" was filed the IRS would still accomplish the same goal: the collection of the erroneous lien amount. Thus, the lien on Leeds' property is the functional equivalent of a notice of levy because it accomplishes the same end.

Accordingly, neither Leeds nor the eventual purchaser would have any remedy. For example, if Leeds, or the eventual purchaser of the property, were to bring a "wrongful levy" action at the time of sale, the Government could very well argue that such a wrongful levy action was not timely under Section 7426(a)(1). See, e.g., EC Term of Years, 127 S. Ct. at 1768 (2007). Similarly, and on the other side of the same coin, if either party was to voluntarily pay off the lien amount, the Government would most surely argue, as it has done in the past, that such a voluntary payment does not waive the Government's immunity. See, e.g., Interfirst Bank, 769 F.2d at 304-05 (5th Cir. 1985). The predicament in which the Government has placed Leeds demonstrates why the lien on its real property should be deemed to fall within the broad definition of "levy" under the Code and jurisdiction is proper.

In anticipation of this argument, the Government alludes to Sections 6325(b)(4) and 7426(a)(4) in an apparent attempt to suggest that Leeds is left with a meaningful remedy. See Motion at 4 n.2. The Government's allusion to Sections 6325(b)(4) and 7426(a)(4), as suggesting such a remedy is inapposite because the IRS has refused to act on Leeds' requested administrative relief.[3] Such refusal is important for three separate, but equally important, reasons.

First, the IRS's refusal to timely act on Leeds administrative request or its denial of such request (which occurred after the Amended Complaint was filed) acts as an admission that the property has been levied upon. See Attachment A. The IRS's tardy letter states that it is denying Leeds' request for return of the property because: "There is no property to return since the IRS has not seized/secured any property." In essence, the IRS deemed Leeds' March 21, 2007 request as inadequate. The IRS, however, needed to inform Leeds of the inadequacy of its request within 30 days. IRS regulation §301.6343-2, entitled "Return of wrongful levied upon property", states that "unless a notification is mailed by the director to the claimant within 30 days of receipt of the request to inform the claimant of the inadequacies, any written request will be considered adequate." §301.6342-2(c) (emphasis added) (attached). Accordingly, because the IRS did not notify Leeds within the 30-day window required by the Regulation, Leeds' request must be "considered adequate" and therefore its wrongful levy action proper because the IRS did not timely object on the grounds that the lien in this case was not a levy under Code until its Motion to Dismiss.

Second, had the IRS notified Leeds that it believed Leeds request was inappropriate because "the IRS has not seized/secured any property" within 30 days, as opposed to almost a year later and weeks (or months)[4] after this action was filed, then Leeds would have been able to make an administrative request under Section 6326 or seek a certificate of discharge

[3] As noted above, the Government now claims that Leeds' administrative request was denied, but this "denial" occurred on March 17, 2008, two weeks after the Amended Complaint was filed. In any event, whether the Court views the IRS's actions as a "refusal to act" or as a "denial" the end result is the same: Leeds has no meaningful remedy.

[4] This wrongful levy action was filed on January 18, 2008, and the Amended Complaint, which added only the quiet title action, was filed on February 28, 2008.

under Section 6325(b)(4). Assuming such a certificate was actually issued, then Leeds would have had 120 days to "bring a civil action against the [Government seeking] a determination of whether the value of the interest of the United States (if any) in such property is less than the value determined by the Secretary." 26 U.S.C. § 7426(a)(4) (emphasis added). The IRS's failure to properly act on Leeds request has placed Leeds in this no-win position, and the Government should not now be allowed to argue that Leeds' original request was improper because to do so would reward the Government for the IRS's dilatory conduct.

Even if the procedures set forth in Sections 6325(b)(4) and 7426(a)(4) were applicable, the actions of the IRS as packaged by the Government in this Motion would leave no meaningful remedy for Leeds. Section 6325(b)(4) requires that the IRS will only issue a "certificate of discharge" if a party pays the contested lien amount or furnishes a bond. Id. at (i) & (ii). Then, and only then, may a party seek relief under Section 7426(a)(4) and at that point it may only challenge "whether the value of the interest" asserted by the IRS is correct. To even begin the process under Section 6325(b)(4), Leeds would have been required to satisfy the entire amount of the $5,212,494.62 lien before the IRS issued a "certificate of discharge" that is a prerequisite for filing a claim under Section 7426(a)(4). For example, if the value of Leeds' real property were valued at $1 million and it sold that property, it still would not be able to bring an action for a refund of that money because the entire amount of the deficiency has not been paid off. See, e.g., Flora v. United States, 362 U.S. 145, 150-51 (1960) (holding that taxpayer must pay off full amount of tax before bringing suit under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(a)(1) for tax refund). Requiring an innocent third party to pay the IRS over $5 million dollars to satisfy the tax liability of an unrelated third party before it can even challenge the IRS's action provides no meaningful remedy. The IRS should not be allowed to use the lien power as a club against innocent taxpayers and then be allowed to hide behind it "lien-is-not-a-levy" aphorism under the guise of strict construction and sovereign immunity to avoid being held accountable for its conduct.

Finally, the Government's argument that because waivers of sovereign immunity are to be strictly construed that a "lien" can never be a "levy" essentially parrots the Williams Court's dissenters, ignoring the equities in this case. Chief Justice Rehnquist stated:

> The Court, in an unusual departure from the bedrock principle that waivers of sovereign immunity must be 'unequivocally expressed,' holds that respondent may sue for a refund of tax which was not assessed against her. In so doing, it outlines in some detail what it conceives to be the equities of respondent's situation—a factor not usually of great significance in construing the Internal Revenue Code.

Id. at 541-42 (Rehnquist, C.J., dissenting). The majority's approach in Williams, however, is more consistent with the approach employed by the Ninth Circuit. As explained in Flores: "Care must be taken to recognize that the statutory scheme which governs tax litigation between individuals and the United States Government is not monolithic; particular sections of the Internal Revenue Code, as they apply to persons who are differently situated, serve different purposes, were drafted with different intents, and therefore require individualized construction." Flores, 551 F.2d at 1173-74 (9th Cir. 1977) (emphasis added). The Government's "one-size-fits-all" approach which it advances in this Motion is not in accord with either the Supreme Court's or Ninth Circuit's approach.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Leeds LP respectfully requests that this Court deny the Government's Motion to Dismiss.

Re: Leeds, L.P.

Dear Mr. Shannahan:

This is in response to your claim dated March 21, 2007 in which you requested the return of an asset wrongfully and illegally levied and liened under Section 6331 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Your claim has been reviewed. We are sorry, but we are denying your claim for the following reason:

There is no property to return since the IRS has not seized/secured any property. The Notice of Federal Tax Lien has not removed any property/assets from the partnership's possession. The lien only attaches to any equity should the asset be sold.

The nominee lien that had been recorded was based on legal counsel obtained through our Area Counsel Attorney's. Copies of the nominee liens had been sent with Publication 783, Instructions on How to Apply for a Certificate of Discharge from a Federal Tax Lien, and Publication 1660, Collection Appeal Rights. An appeal nor an application for a discharge had not been received.
